

Malta

Malta, the island where the apostle Paul was shipwrecked in Acts 27-28, has a colorful history due to its location in the Mediterranean Sea. A country with a successful economy and many international visitors, Malta is also an island dominated by Roman Catholicism. With very little evangelical presence, the spiritual needs of reaching the Maltese and many international visitors are great. As English is one of the official languages, immediate opportunities for ministry abound.

NEEDS

Religion is seen as a system that is often disconnected from the rest of life. Gospel workers are needed to engage people with the message of a true relationship with God.

Cults and other false religions influence those who are looking for something other than Roman Catholicism. Workers are needed to teach the Bible to young believers and seekers.

Many students visit Malta to attend university or learn English. Workers are needed to engage these young people and help them settle their life's course on a biblical foundation.

Evangelism and discipleship were designed by Jesus to be carried out through the community of a local church. Malta needs its churches strengthened and new ones planted.
